

Factories are still opening up. Those which it seemed would never be able to open their doors to employees and business again are now under full steam ahead. For instance recently we noticed where the Three Rivers Glass Factory has again resumed operations after a three year close-down. With the reopening of the plant, one hundred men were returned to work on a twenty-four-hour daily, seven-day-per-week schedule. Sufficient orders have been received to insure maintenance of the 24-hour daily schedule for several months to come. Such is the return of normalcy.

Factories are still opening up.
